Pending Claims

1. (Original) An intracorporeal site marker for marking a selected site within tissue of a patient's body, comprising:

(a) an ultrasound detectable body including boundaries having a high contrast in acoustical impedance when the marker is placed in tissue of the selected site, so as to efficiently reflect ultrasound during ultrasound imaging; and

(b) a body shape which is recognizably artificial when the marker is subject to ultrasound or X-ray imaging, so as to be readily distinguishable from biological features within the tissue site.

2-41 (Canceled)

42. (New) A marker delivery system, comprising:

an elongated marker delivery tube which has a closed distal end, at least one slit in the closed distal end and an inner lumen extending to and in fluid communication with the at least one slit therein;

a piston slidably disposed within the inner lumen of the marker delivery tube; and a plurality of biopsy site markers slidably disposed within the inner lumen of the marker delivery tube distal to the piston disposed therein.

43. The marker delivery system of Claim 42, further comprising an outer cannula configured to receive said elongated marker delivery device and direct the closed distal end thereof to a desire location.
